

Abstract

The present invention relates to a composition for filling a void in orthopedic joints or bone fracture sites. The composition comprises a polymer matrix and titanium particle less than 50 microns in diameter. The composition may be heated 5 to a fluid state, injected into the void, and allowed to cool to body temperature, returning to a flexible, non-dispersing state.